SUPPORT AND ASSISTANCE ON THE PATH TO THE EU

Serbian President Aleksandar Vučić participated in the Southeast Europe–Ukraine Summit in Kiev, attended by senior officials from the European Commission and countries in the region. Vučić highlighted the importance of cooperation and support on the European path, but stressed that differing positions on Russia continue to divide Serbia from others. Albanian Prime Minister Edi Rama emphasised the importance of communication and cooperation with Serbia despite their differences, as well as the need for greater inclusion of the Western Balkans in the EU. Ukraine opened Cluster 6 in its EU accession negotiations, while the EU and Ukraine signed an agreement on joint drone production as part of their military and industrial cooperation during the Russian aggression.

Belgrade the Only Participant Not to Sign the Declaration

Belgrade was the only participant in the Southeast Europe–Ukraine Summit not to sign the joint declaration, which Serbian President Aleksandar Vučić explained by Serbia's position on sanctions against Russia. During his visit to Kiev, Vučić held meetings with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, the Romanian president and the Slovenian prime minister, stressing the importance of respecting the territorial integrity of both countries. He announced the acceleration of the Đerdap 3 project in cooperation with Romania and emphasised the importance of humanitarian aid to Ukraine and support for its EU accession. He also spoke about opportunities for better regional connectivity through corridors extending to Armenia, Azerbaijan and Türkiye. Vučić dismissed controversies surrounding statements by certain ministers and reiterated that Serbia's policy remains focused on peace and stability.

Serbia Deeply Values Its Friendship with Israel and Relations with the US

National Assembly Speaker Ana Brnabić said at the "Partners in a Changing World" conference that Serbia deeply values its friendship with Israel and its strategic relationship with the United States, highlighting the importance of the forthcoming strategic dialogue between Serbia and the US. Brnabić stressed that the international environment is changing rapidly, calling long-standing assumptions into question and creating a new geopolitical reality marked by uncertainty. She noted that reliable partnerships are not formed overnight, but are built over years through dialogue, consistency, mutual respect and trust, which is especially important in difficult times when countries are seeking stable allies.

Gojković: Exchange of Knowledge and Experience

The Provincial Government of Vojvodina and Poland's Lubusz Voivodeship signed a cooperation agreement aimed at strengthening economic, institutional and cultural ties between the two regions. The cooperation covers the advancement of economic relations, investment potential, the exchange of experience in using European funds, and links between development agencies, science and technology parks and free zones. Particular importance is attached to cooperation in science, tourism, agritourism, agriculture, viticulture and wine production. President of the Provincial Government Maja Gojković highlighted the potential for developing concrete forms of cooperation, while Marshal of the Lubusz Voivodeship Sebastian Ciemnociński expressed satisfaction with the
