Regulatory Authority; Election of the President; REM Council

After two years, Serbia's Regulatory Authority for Electronic Media is operating again. A constitutive session was held, but REM has still not been fully constituted because neither an official president nor a deputy president was elected. Both candidates received four votes. The vote was conducted by secret ballot, and the session was chaired by Dubravka Valić Nedeljković.

SERBIA-US AGREEMENT SHOCKS PRIŠTINA

The United States suspended its strategic dialogue with Priština because of the Kosovo government's actions toward the Serbian community in Kosovo and Metohija, while simultaneously establishing such a dialogue with Serbia, prompting tensions and dissatisfaction in Priština. Politicians in Priština blame Prime Minister Albin Kurti for the deterioration of relations with Washington, while former ambassadors and officials say that such a policy harms Kosovo's security, economy, and European integration.

MACUT: MINISTERS' PERSONAL VIEWS HAVE NOTHING TO DO WITH THE GOVERNMENT'S POSITIONS

Serbian Prime Minister Đuro Macut said that the personal views of ministers, including Minister Snežana Paunović, have nothing to do with the Government's official policy. He stressed that the Government pursues a responsible state policy based on preserving peace, protecting state and national interests, respecting international law, dialogue, and human rights. Although the minister's statements about ethnic cleansing in Kosovo were unacceptable, she apologised for them. Macut called for a sober approach to the situation, emphasising that the Government's goal is to work in Serbia's interests rather than engage in political disputes.

We Are Closely Monitoring All Geopolitical Changes

Serbian Foreign Minister Marko Đurić says that Serbia is pursuing a carefully balanced foreign policy based on neutrality and independence, with the goal of EU membership and strengthening regional stability. Serbia maintains strategic partnerships with China, Russia, and the United States, with which it recently launched a strategic dialogue aimed at improving security, the economy, infrastructure, and scientific and technological cooperation. Serbia has also joined NASA's Artemis programme, opening new opportunities for international scientific cooperation.

Brnabić: Serbia-Republika Srpska Parliamentary Forum in Banja Luka on 3 September

President of the National Assembly of Serbia Ana Brnabić announced that the Serbia-Republika Srpska Parliamentary Forum will be held in Banja Luka on 3 September, following an agreement with President of the National Assembly of Republika Srpska Nenad Stevandić. Brnabić noted that the two of them are the parliamentary speakers who have met most frequently, emphasising the importance of their meetings, which deliver concrete results.
