EU Offers Economic Benefits but Demands Loyalty

Blic reports on a European Commission draft seen by Politico, under which candidate countries could gain broader access to the single market, research programs and industrial cooperation at an earlier stage. At the same time, the proposal envisages stronger alignment of candidate countries with the EU's strategic and foreign-policy priorities.

Vucic: Three Important Rules for the "United Serbia" List

Aleksandar Vucic, the lead candidate of the "United Serbia" list, during a tour of the Srem District, appealed to citizens and supporters of the list not to respond to provocations with violence and to stay away from clashes. He highlighted three important rules: gratitude to supporters for their courage, avoiding a spiral of violence, and the need to build bridges with political opponents after the elections. Vucic urged citizens to focus on the election program and ideas and to vote in order to secure Serbia's future.

Srdanovic: Vucic's Departure Would Be Positive for Countries in the Region

Ilija Srdanovic, first on the Student List for the snap parliamentary elections, said that Aleksandar Vucic leaving power would have positive consequences for Serbia and the countries of the region. He rejected claims that he is connected with Milo Djukanovic and Vesna Medenica, stressing that he has never met them. Srdanovic said the Student List's policy would be based on respect for the sovereignty of all states and the rights of minority communities. He also emphasized the importance of respecting the Constitution, building independent institutions and opening up the media space. He did not specify Serbia's foreign-policy course toward the EU, NATO, the U.S., Russia and China, but stressed the need for public debate on strategic foreign-policy orientations.
