Interior Ministry Chiefs Regularly Attend Progressive Party Rallies

Danas raises the issue of the political neutrality of the police following the appearance of senior Interior Ministry officials at rallies held by the ruling parties. The newspaper's sources argue that the Police Act prohibits political engagement by police officers and call for a response from the Internal Control Sector, pointing to different treatment of senior officials and rank-and-file police officers.

Kosovo Again Facing New Elections

Kosovo could once again face early parliamentary elections if the Assembly fails to elect a new president, after the mandate of acting president Aljbuljena Hadžiju expired. The Constitutional Court provides for the dissolution of parliament and elections within 45 days, while disputes surrounding the Kosovo Specialist Chambers in The Hague are further deepening the political crisis.

Republic Electoral Commission: Voters from Kosovo and Metohija Will Vote in Vranje, Raška, Kuršumljia and Tutin

The Republic Electoral Commission decided that voters from the territory of Kosovo and Metohija will vote in Vranje, Raška, Kuršumljia and Tutin in the early parliamentary elections, as voting in Kosovo and Metohija is not possible. Local election commissions are to determine the specific polling stations in cooperation with local authorities.

No Question of Separating Vojvodina

Nenad Čanak's proposal to launch "talks about Vojvodina" after the elections prompted a reaction from Aleksandar Vučić, who said that discussions could be held about the province's infrastructure and development needs, but not about federalization, confederalization or changing Serbia's system of government.

They Would Impose Sanctions on Russia Over False Plague Reports

News of a suspected case of pneumonic plague in Russia's Irkutsk Oblast sparked a new political debate in Serbia about relations with Russia. Part of the public called for flights to be suspended and restrictions imposed on Russian citizens, while Serbian infectious-disease experts said there was no reason for panic and that the risk of spread was very low.

Kreni-Promeni Movement to Request Emergency Session

Kreni-Promeni announced that it would request an emergency session of the Belgrade City Assembly to discuss the dismissal of Mayor Aleksandar Šapić. A proposal to add the issue to the agenda of the regular session was rejected, after which part of the opposition left the chamber, while the assembly majority adopted all 43 agenda items.
