Citizens' Money Used to Pay for 'Political Prostitution'

Danas reports findings from a Vreme investigation according to which employees from a large number of public institutions used a network of accounts for party-political commenting online. The published data mention 231 institutions and 1,241 platform users, with claims that many activities took place during working hours. The newspaper's interlocutors are calling on the competent authorities to investigate possible misuse of public resources; the findings are presented as a subject of public controversy, not as facts established by a court.

Who Paid for Fico's Visit?

Danas raises the question of in what capacity Slovak Prime Minister Robert Fico attended a campaign rally of the 'Aleksandar Vučić - United Serbia' list in Novi Sad. The newspaper asks who financed his visit and whether the Agency for the Prevention of Corruption should act on the matter. It states that questions were sent both to the Agency and to the SNS information service, but that no replies had been received by the time the article was published.

Rejection of Student List Appeals Exhausts Almost All Options

Republic Electoral Commission member Vladimir Dragaš said that the rejection of the Student List's appeals regarding voting abroad has almost exhausted the available legal options. Two appeals were rejected by the Administrative Court, while a similar outcome is expected for the third. In his assessment, any proceedings before the Constitutional Court would not be able to affect the organization of voting in the October 25 elections.

Republic Electoral Commission Adopts Several Decisions on Elections for National Minority Councils

The Republic Electoral Commission adopted several decisions concerning the direct elections for national minority councils scheduled for November 8. The composition of the working bodies was amended and the number of their members increased from 378 to 382, along with coordinators from administrative bodies. Two polling stations in Raška are planned for voters from Kosovo and Metohija, as in the previous election cycle.

European Integration Is a Question of Survival

Zdravko Ponoš, one of the lead candidates on the 'European Serbia' list, presented European integration as the country's central development path in an interview with Politika. He said the coalition has proposals for the economy, healthcare, education, energy, security, and diplomacy. Among its pledges, he highlighted restoring previously reduced pensions to the affected pensioners and their families.
