Corruption Is Worse Than Transparency International's Rating Suggests

The article points to the limitations of the Corruption Perceptions Index in assessing the true scale of the problem in Serbia. It states that large sums in public contracts have been awarded outside standard public procurement procedures, including through intergovernmental agreements. Serbia scored 33 points and ranked 116th in the 2025 index, which the article links to poor transparency in public spending.

Too Few Inspectors and Insufficient Funding

The Anti-Corruption Council has warned of a shortage of inspectors and funding for food safety controls in Serbia. Its report highlights the risk of counterfeit products being produced and sold, including fake honey and diluted beverages. According to the Council, inadequate controls could endanger consumers' health and undermine the competitiveness of domestic producers.
