Ten Lists at the Starting Line

The Republic Electoral Commission has so far proclaimed ten electoral lists for the snap parliamentary elections scheduled for October 25, while the deadline for submitting candidacies runs until October 4. The proclaimed lists include coalitions gathered around the SNS and SPS, the Student List, four minority lists, Authentic Right, People's Choice and European Serbia.

Minority Mandates Could Be Decisive

The possible role of minority lists in forming a future parliamentary majority is being considered, particularly in the event of a close election result. So far, the lists of the SDP-CDP, the Alliance of Vojvodina Hungarians, the Justice and Reconciliation Party and the Russian Party have been proclaimed, while the article's interviewees note that their post-election influence will depend on the distribution of mandates.

False Authenticity Stands Out to Citizens

Danas analyzes how the government and the student movement are using social media in the election campaign. The article's interviewees say that student accounts use digital channels as their primary space for communication, while the government's campaign also relies heavily on traditional media; the assessments presented reflect the views of the interviewees and the author of the article.

Stanković: Schools Must Not Be a Platform for Political Activity

Acting Education Minister Dejan Vuk Stanković spoke in Kruševac with primary and secondary school principals about the functioning of institutions, plans and improvements to the education system. He emphasized the need to balance curricula and said that schools should remain places of education and upbringing, rather than spaces for party propaganda.
