NIS and the OFAC License: Interview with Gojko Vlaović

Eight days remain until the current OFAC license allowing NIS to operate expires, while the issue of the company's future ownership structure remains unresolved. NewsMax Balkans guest Gojko Vlaović believes that further developments will largely depend on decisions by the U.S. administration on another extension of the license and possible approval for the sale of the Russian stake.

Drought and Corn Yield: Interview with Uroš Davidović

According to farmers' estimates, drought has cut the corn yield by half in some parts of Serbia, while problems are also being recorded with grain quality and purchase prices. Harvesting began earlier because of high temperatures and a lack of moisture, while soybean yields are also expected to be below average, raising the question of how the weaker harvest could affect food prices.

Temu Becomes the Top Online Retailer in Four European Countries

According to ECDB data for 2025, China's Temu became the leading online retailer in Finland, Croatia, Hungary and Slovenia, and ranks among the top two in a total of 12 European markets. The platform also rapidly increased its business volume in Serbia after entering the market in 2024, while further growth will also depend on new European customs and regulatory measures for low-cost shipments from third countries.
