Air Serbia ATR damaged in Belgrade ground handling incident.

NEWS FLASH An Air Serbia ATR72-600 aircraft, registered YU-ASF, was damaged at Belgrade Nikola Tesla Airport yesterday, July 28. The damage occurred when ground service equipment operated by an external handling company came into contact with the Air Serbia aircraft while providing services to another airline. Due to the extent of the required repairs and the need to complete all prescribed technical procedures, YU-ASF is expected to remain out of service for approximately three months. In a statement, the airline said, "The aircraft's temporary withdrawal from service may affect operations during the summer season, potentially resulting in schedule changes, aircraft substitutions or other operational adjustments. Air Serbia is making every effort to minimise any impact on passengers. The relevant authorities have been involved in investigating the incident, with all pertinent facts and circumstances examined". The carrier apologised to passengers for any inconvenience.
